

In response to the outbreak of new coronavirus (2019 ncov) pneumonia in Wuhan and other places, the World Health Organization Office in China said today that the latest situation shows that the virus may cause sustained human to human transmission. Little is known about the virus, how it spreads and how virulent it is. However, who is working closely with the Chinese government and other relevant countries, and the research on the virus has made progress.