

China's demographic dividends are still within a "window of opportunity", but that window will shut soon, with fewer births putting pressure on the working population, a Chinese demographic expert warned on Thursday.
People walk through an underpass at night in downtown Beijing, China, November 22, 2018. REUTERS/Jason Lee

BEIJING, Jan. 20 (Reuters) – China's demographic dividend is still in a window of opportunity, but that window will close soon as a declining birth rate puts pressure on the working population, a Chinese population expert warned on Thursday.